MORE DUEL TALK.

Notwithstanding the statement made yesterday that the Irubide-Neville affair had been settled a Washington paper of this morning says:

Nothing but satisfaction of the most pronounced type, or gore of a distinctly sanguinary character will obliterate the difference which have arisen between Prince Irubide, the lineal descendant of the Montezumas, and Robert Neville, the well known club man.

Matters have gradually approached a crisis, and there is now nothing in common between the two gentlemen but thirty-six feet of animalcule populated atmosphere.

The statement comes from an authoritative source that no reconciliation has taken place between the prince and Mr. Neville, and no bottles, cold or otherwise, have been broken in commemoration of a consummation so devoutly to be wished.

On the contrary the breach has widened, and nothing but extreme measures will heal the wounds of honor or assuage the pangs of wounded pride.

Pending an adjudication of the unpleasantness it is said that a scene of the double has been selected possessing the double advantages of being historic and of questionable legal jurisdiction.
This spot is located at the junction of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware—a little strip of land is the thing which has been the cause of endless disputa-tion for half a century.

Magistrates, judges and courts of equity have been called upon in vain to determine the question of ownership, but the controversy, like Banquo's spectre refuses to down and the status quo maintains its undisturbed security.

The prospective duellists base their calculations upon the well-founded hope that litigation of a proprietary character may continue until the participants have been gathered to their fathers.

Whether it be at daybreak this morning or sunrise a week hence arrangements are said to have been completed, for Prince Irubide and Robert Neville to face each other at a dozen intervening paces and engage in that species of personal satisfaction which drastic laws have in these latter days brought into disrepute.

With this plan of the situation positively stated, it becomes apparent that all rumor of a reconciliation and love-feast were but fitting disguises to deceive the unwary and defraud the superinquisitive. On the contrary, it is stated that the complication has been aggravated and the aggressor has become the aggrieved.

When the unfortunate discussion of equestrianism occurred at the Metropolitan Club, Prince Irubide indeed as giving the insult, which Mr. Neville promptly resented. Those in a position to possess inside information declare that a challenge was formulated by Mr. Neville and forwarded to the prince, who accepted without hesitation. Since that time, it is said, the challenged party has nursed his injuries and amplified his grievances.

The prince is described as feeling that nothing but blood of the most crimson hue can efface the indignities put upon him. An apology from him is depicted as being among the impossibilities, and any concession on his part too remote for belief and too fantastic for expectation.

In view of these irreconcilable differences a duel is held to be inevitable.
Seconds were named with the sending and acceptance of the challenge. These gentlemen were not, as has been surmised, members of legations, where immunity from prosecution might prove a pleasant aftermath to the discharge of their extra hazardous duties, but men of nerve who have themselves chased across lots for a convenient location where blood could be drawn without the incurring of too much accountability.

After the selection of a satisfactory, isolated and legally entangled spot had been made, it is said the principals hastened to the vicinity and are now awaiting the time in which their hour of vindication shall arrive. In pursue of arrangements previously made, it is said Prince Irubide yesterday morning went to Philadelphia, where he is now alleged to be encamped at a hospitable inn.

Last evening Mr. Neville is asserted to have followed him. The seconds are said to have later in the night gone to join the principals, and unless satisfactory apologies are exchanged within the next few hours, something must drop, and it may be a white handkerchief.

There is no doubt that both men possess nerve and determination, and if the reported reconciliation has not taken place, nothing but the code affords a mutually agreeable exit from the present difficulty.

Per contra, at an early hour this morning two members of the Metropolitan Club, one of them a close friend of Mr. Neville, declared that the difficulty between Mr. Neville and Prince Irubide had been amicably settled, as stated yesterday, and that a complete reconciliation had been effected. Both Mr. Neville and Prince Irubide were at the Metropolitan Club.
